

Early Victorian bisque jointed baby doll

£45

Description

Early Victorian bisque jointed baby doll, circa 1840.

Bisque jointed dolls, popular in the 19th and early 20th centuries, feature heads and limbs made from bisque porcelain, a type of unglazed ceramic. Their articulated joints allow for lifelike poses. Valued for their detailed facial expressions and craftsmanship, these dolls are cherished by collectors and historians.
