Description

A large anatomical chart showing the human skeleton from the front and back. Drawn by American Frohse Anatomical Charts, published by A J Nystrom of Chicago, and retailed in the UK by Adam Rouilly of London.

The American Frohse Anatomical Charts, created by German anatomist Fritz Frohse, are detailed, educational illustrations depicting human anatomy. Widely used in medical education, these charts offer clear, accurate representations of bodily structures, aiding students and professionals in understanding complex anatomical relationships and functions.
