Description

A small plaster cast fragment moulded from an antique original. With its softly worn surface, crisp relief detail, and quiet sculptural presence, this appealing object captures the enduring fascination with the art and ornament of the classical world.

Plaster casts have long played an important role in the study, display, and appreciation of antiquity. Made from original fragments, they enabled artists, architects, collectors, and students to examine celebrated forms and decorative details without the need to own or handle the ancient object itself. Whether displayed alone or alongside other casts and archaeological objects, they bring a sense of history, texture, and scholarly curiosity to an interior.

The fragment's reduced scale makes it particularly versatile: it can be placed on a bookshelf, mounted within a cabinet of curiosities, incorporated into a decorative arrangement, or used as an accent in a study, library, or classically inspired interior. Its pale plaster surface lends itself beautifully to both traditional and contemporary settings.

A charming and evocative object for collectors of casts, classical decorative arts, artists' materials, and antiquarian curiosities.
