Description

An early 20th-century Arts & Crafts brooch in bronze and enamel, dating to around 1910, with a domed centre and rope-twist border.

The enamel combines mottled amber, ochre, brown and black, with warmer passages contrasting against the darker areas. Its curved surface catches the light across the centre, revealing variations in colour and depth.

A patinated bronze mount surrounds the enamel, with the twisted border providing texture around the circular outline. The restrained setting keeps attention on the enamel while giving the brooch a clearly defined edge.

The combination of non-precious metal, decorative enamel and simple construction reflects the Arts & Crafts interest in materials and surface treatment. A plain pin fitting survives on the reverse.

Compact in form, the brooch brings together contrasting textures without additional ornament, allowing the enamel to remain the principal feature.

We make every effort to ensure our photographs represent the piece accurately; however, colours may vary slightly depending on lighting and screen settings.
