Description

A good Farrow & Jackson "igene' patent Art Deco cocktail shaker with handle and internal ice compartment. Cools your martini without diluting it.

The Farrow & Jackson Igene cocktail shaker was introduced in the late 1920s by the engineering firm Farrow & Jackson. Known for supplying equipment to the wine and spirits trade, the company applied its technical expertise to barware during the interwar cocktail boom.

The patented Igene was distinctive for its internal ice compartment, which chilled drinks without diluting them while shaking. This clever design reflected the era's fascination with modernity and efficiency, as well as the glamour of Art Deco style. Produced into the twentieth century, the Igene became a symbol of innovation in drinking culture and remains collectible today.
