Description

A charming small Victorian silver plate salver, finely engraved and elegantly proportioned. Its polished surface is enriched with decorative engraving, giving the piece a refined presence while preserving the restrained elegance so characteristic of 19th-century tableware.

Originally intended for presenting visiting cards, calling cards, confectionery, or small refreshments, a salver of this size is wonderfully versatile today. It can be used to display a decanter, serve drinks or sweets, hold jewellery and other small objects, or simply add a gleam of antique silver to a table, desk, or dressing table.

The engraved decoration catches the light beautifully against the bright silver-plated ground, while the compact scale makes it especially easy to place. It has the pleasing weight and quality of a period piece intended for both use and display, and its understated form allows it to complement interiors ranging from traditional to contemporary.

A lovely example of Victorian silver plate, offering decorative detail, practical function, and the timeless appeal of antique English table silver. An ideal addition to a collection, a thoughtful gift, or a stylish finishing touch for entertaining.
