Description

A late 19th century Wedgwood blue Jasperware three piece tea service with silver plate mounts, comprising a teapot, milk jug, and sugar bowl.

Jasperware is a type of fine, unglazed stoneware developed by Josiah Wedgwood in the late 18th century. Renowned for its matte finish and pastel colors, especially the iconic Wedgwood blue, it often features white classical relief decorations.

Jasperware revolutionised ceramics by blending aesthetics and durability, making it ideal for decorative and functional items. Its designs, inspired by Greco-Roman art, include vases, cameos, and tableware, celebrated as a hallmark of Neoclassical elegance and craftsmanship.
