Description

A Victorian mother of pearl travelling inkwell. Filled with your favourite perfume this travelling inkwell can take pride of place on your dressing table wherever you are.

Travelling inkwells, used from the 18th to 19th centuries, were portable containers for ink, designed for writers on the move. Typically made of durable materials like metal or glass, they often featured secure lids and compact sizes. These inkwells ensured that ink could be conveniently carried and used while travelling.
