Description

An Edwardian advertising dish for Kynoch soap. Used on a chemist's counter to display the soap.

Kynoch Soap was a product of Kynoch Ltd., a British company primarily known for its ammunition and explosives manufacturing in the 19th and early 20th centuries. Diversifying its production, Kynoch introduced soap and other household products. Kynoch Soap was marketed for its quality and effectiveness, reflecting the company's commitment to high standards. Though primarily recognised for industrial goods, Kynoch's foray into everyday consumer products like soap highlights its versatility during its operational years.
