Description

An Edwardian garland brooch set with sapphires and diamonds in platinum and gold, circa 1915

Garland brooches are exquisite jewellery pieces that became especially popular during the Edwardian and Belle Époque periods (late 19th to early 20th centuries). Inspired by natural motifs, these brooches often feature intricate arrangements of flowers, ribbons, and foliage, crafted in delicate platinum or gold.

They are typically set with diamonds and sometimes coloured gemstones, emphasising elegance and refinement. The garland style reflects the era's fascination with lightness and femininity, making these brooches highly collectible today. Often worn as a statement accessory on gowns or coats, garland brooches remain a testament to the craftsmanship and romantic aesthetic of their time.
